Confusion spreads as Italy attempts to lock down 16M

ROME (The Washington Post) - Italy on Sunday launched a complicated and urgent plan to restrict the movement of roughly 16 million people, a measure that unleashed confusion about how it could be enforced and whether it would be enough to slow the spread of the coronavirus.

The plan to lock down large swaths of the north was the first major attempt by a democracy during the coronavirus crisis to radically halt the routines of daily life - an effort that will have significant effects on civil liberties. But in the hours before and after the measure became law, people continued to stream out of the northern hubs of Milan and Venice on trains and planes for southern Italy or elsewhere in Europe.

Lockdown a test for Europe

Sunday, then, provided the first glimpse of a coronavirus lockdown, European-style - a test of how the open borders spirit of this continent might change as countries grapple with the scale and risks of the disease.

As the day went on, it became clear that Italy was not trying to impose anything close to the absolute movement restrictions that have been enforced by China. Some analysts pointed out that even limited movement cuts de Italy's north risked further spreading the virus, and for the first time a European Union leader - Czech Prime Minister Andrej Babis - suggested that Italy's government needed to do more to interrupt the flow of its citizens across the bloc's borders.

Italy should ban all its citizens from traveling to Europe, Babis told Czech Television on Sunday. He said Europe was unable to take its own action because its Schengen rules allow movement across borders without passport control.

Other European countries have insisted that borders remain open. It was unclear whether either scenario would help stop the outbreak from spreading as cases multiply throughout the continent.

"We're all in a state of confusion," said Ezio Mauro, former editor in chief of the Rome newspaper La Repubblica. The Italian government is finding itself in a difficult spot because it is experimenting, fighting against an enemy whose origin, nature, effects and consequences are unknown.

Data released by Italy on Sunday night underscored the urgency. Active cases jumped more than 1,300 in a single day to 6,387, and deaths jumped by 133 to 366.

China: No locally transmitted coronavirus cases outside Hubei

BEIJING (Reuters) - Mainland China, outside Hubei province, the epicenter of the coronavirus outbreak, reported no new locally transmitted cases on Sunday for the second straight day, as authorities remained on alert for infections arriving from abroad.

China had 40 new confirmed cases of coronavirus infections on Sunday, the National Health Commission said Monday, down from 44 cases a day earlier, and the lowest number since the health authority started publishing nationwide data on Jan. 20.

Of the new cases on Sunday, 36 were new infections in Wuhan, the provincial capital of Hubei, while the remaining four in Gansu province were imported from Iran.

The total number of imported cases hit 67, including the four Gansu cases.

The new cases on Sunday bring the total accumulated number of confirmed cases in mainland China to 80,735.

While the domestic spread of the virus has significantly slowed in recent days, authorities continue to be mindful of risks stemming from people - foreigners and Chinese nationals - traveling back to China from affected regions.

Shanghai stepped up a report screening over the weekend as imported coronavirus infections from countries such as Italy and Iran emerged as the biggest source of imported cases in China.

Seoul: NKorea launched unidentified projectiles

SEOUL (Bloomberg News) - North Korea fired three unidentified projectiles off its eastern coast Monday. South Korea's defense ministry said in a text message, in its second such launch in a week that raises security concerns as world leaders are battling the coronavirus outbreak.

South Korea's Joint Chiefs of Staff said the three seem to have been launched from Sondok, and flew into the sea separating the country from Japan. Japan's Coast Guard said the North Korea projectile didn't land in its territorial waters and a Japanese public broadcaster said the projectiles appeared to be ballistic missiles.

Top Saudi royals charged with treason

(The Washington Post) - Four senior princes including two of the most prominent members of the Saudi royal family have been detained in the Saudi capital of Riyadh, a move that could be designed to further strengthen the position of the kingdom's de facto ruler, according to two people close to Saudi leadership.

Prince Ahmed bin Abdulaziz, an uncle of Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman and one of his cousins, Mohammed bin Nayef, were taken into custody Friday morning, the people said, speaking on the condition of anonymity to discuss highly sensitive internal Saudi matters.
