 Comments From the Assistant Secretary of
 Defense for Production and Logistics

DOD RESPONSE: Concur.

- o FINDING K: Current Plant Operations. The GAO reported that, because of the potential for contamination, the Navy requires plant operators to wear personal protective equipment whenever they enter the plant to continue its operation. According to the GAO, before entering the plant, operators must be outfitted with the proper personal protective equipment in the entrance way to the new decontamination and when the facility employee completes his/her shift, the employee exits through a separate part of the decontamination facility where decontamination procedures are undergone. The GAO observed that, according to Navy officials, the proper personnel protective equipment has significantly reduced the chances of the plant operators being contaminated during plant operations. (pp. 30-31/GAO Draft Report)

Now on p. 20-21.

DOD RESPONSE: Concur.

- o FINDING L: Storage and Disposal of PCB Waste. The GAO found that the contaminated transformer and other pieces of equipment and materials, used to clean and decontaminate the area, have been sent to the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office (DRMO) for disposal. The GAO noted that, because of the large volume of contaminated items, a significant amount of the items have been stored outside pending shipment to a California disposal facility. The GAO also found that, in an October 1987 inspection report, the EPA criticized the DRMO for storing the contaminated transformer outside in a temporary storage area for more than 30 days. The GAO observed that, on November 30, the DRMO sent the first shipment of contaminated articles to California. The GAO further observed, however, that because of the large volume of contaminated waste, the DRMO continues to receive from Piti additional shipment to disposal facilities will be necessary. (p. 31/GAO Draft Report)

Now on p. 21.

DOD RESPONSE: Concur.

- o FINDING M: Navy PCB Transformers. According to the GAO, since December 1985, the Navy has eliminated about 1260 PCB Transformers. The GAO reported that, in May 1986, before the Piti spill, the Chief of Naval Operations instructed all major commands to replace PCB equipment in poor condition or with a potential for serious health, environmental, or mission impact. The GAO reported that the PWC Guam then set a schedule to replace all of its PCB equipment by FY 1991, at a cost of about $2.9 million, and had planned to replace the transformer at Piti (which leaked PCBs) in FY 1989 for about $51,000. The GAO noted that, as a result of the spill from this transformer, the Navy will now have to spend about $10 million to clean up the site. The GAO reported that the PWC Guam has initiated actions to accelerate the replacement of other PCB transformers at the base. The GAO further reported that the Navy tested the other 2,000 KVA transformer at Piti found it as also susceptible to the same kind of accident; as a result, both PCB transformers (including the one that leaked) have been temporarily replaced with portable non-PCB transformers located outside the plant. (pp. 6-7, pp. 32-33/GAO Draft Report)

DoD Response: Concur. The DoD again notes that the cost of cleanup is now expected to be about $6 million.

- o FINDING N: Lessons Learned. The GAO found that, because the PWC Guam was one of the first Navy installations to have a spill covered by both the December 1986, OSHA and the April 1987, EPA regulations concerning the cleanup of PCB spills, the PWC Commander issued a memorandum stating the lessons learned and made recommendations to solve the problems. According to the GAO, a limited number of the lessons learned at Piti were also cited by the Commander of the Naval Rework Facility, Norfolk, as lessons learned after the PCB fire there. Examples of the lessons learned at Guam are, as follows:

- Emergency responses for hazardous substances spill should be limited to containment only.
- The OSHA considers only saranex-laminated coveralls as adequate protection for liquid PCB cleanup.
- The PWC started PCB cleanup prior to determining if dioxin or furans were present.
- There are currently no standards for dioxin and furan cleanup.
- The OSHA regulations concerning employee safety for hazardous substance cleanups are not clear. (pp. 34-35, pp. 83-89/GAO Draft Report)

DOD RESPONSE: Concur.

- o FINDING O: Navy Procedures. The GAO reported that officials from the Naval Facilities Engineering Command

Environmental Office considered the existing regulations and guidelines, which were revised in 1986 and 1987, adequate for shore activities to use when cleaning up hazardous waste spill. Although recognizing that there have been a number of fire-related or pressurized releases of PCBs during the last 2 years and the bases have had some problems in responding. The GAO reported that the problem is perceived by the Navy as a case of failure to implement the existing regulations and guidance, not a case of inadequate regulations and guidance. The GAO observed that the Navy does not, therefore, plan to revise any regulations or guidance. (p. 35/GAO Draft Report)

DOD RESPONSE: Concur.

o FINDING P: Regulations Governing Worker Safety. The GAO reported OSHA regulations require heads of Federal agencies to furnish each employee a place of employment free from recognized hazards that cause, or are likely to cause, death or serious physical harm. The GAO further reported that the Occupational Safety and Health Standards govern worker safety during PCB spills, such as occurred at the Piti Power Plant, as follows:

- The PPE shall be used, which will protect employees from hazards they are likely to encounter, based on performance characteristics of the PPE relative to the requirements and limitations of the site, the task specific conditions and duration, and the hazards and potential hazards at the site.
- All PPE shall be of a safe design and constructed for the work to be performed.
- Prior to entry into a hazardous waste operations area, a preliminary evaluation of a site's characteristics shall be performed by a trained person to aid in the selection of appropriated employee protection methods.
- During site entry, a more detailed evaluation of the site specific characteristics shall be performed by a trained person to further identify existing site hazards and to further aid in the selection of the appropriate engineering controls and PPE for the task to be performed.

The GAO also reported that the Navy PWC Guam Instruction 5090.5A, "PWC Guam Oil and Hazardous Waste Management and Spill Contingency Plan," lists an impermeable suit as the coverall required for cleanup of hazardous material. In addition, the GAO commented that the Naval Energy and Environmental Support Office PCB Program Management Guide states that all workers, who may be exposed to PCBs, should be equipped with chemical protective clothing to insure their protection and recommends that, if exposure to liquids is anticipated, the outer coveralls should be made of chemically resistant materials such as saranex-coated tyvek or vitor-coated neoprene. (pp. 40-41/GAO Draft Report)

DOD RESPONSE: Concur.

- o FINDING Q: Use of PPE During the Accident. The GAO reported that, during and immediately after the PCB spill, there was confusion as to the source of oil and many of the individuals who were in the plant at the time were unaware that the transformer contained PCBs and, therefore, worked in a potential dangerous situation. The GAO also reported that, in addition, plant employees had not been told what to do in case of a spill. The GAO observed that, because some employees did not know that the failed transformer contained PCBs, personal protective equipment was not an initial consideration. The GAO found that, once the PWC determined the oil contained PCBs, most of the employees were evacuated from the plant. The GAO concluded, however, that based on the medical records it reviewed, some workers stayed in the plant for a significant time with no PPE. (pp. 5-6, pp. 43-44. pp. 53-54/GAO Draft Report)

DoD Response: Concur.

- o FINDING R: Recommended PPE Unavailable. The GAO reported that the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) recommends that, if exposure to liquid PCBs is anticipated, workers should be equipped with coveralls made of chemically resistant materials, such as saranex coated tyvek or viton-coated neoprene. The GAO observed that, when dealing with liquid contaminants, the NIOSH does not recommend the use of uncoated tyvek, such as that worn by the PWC response crew when first entering the contaminated plant. According to the GAO, the Navy had incorporated this guidance into its "PCB Program Management Guide 1981," which the Pacific Division (in turn) incorporated into its instruction entitled, "Management of Polychlorinated Biphenyls." The GAO noted that PWC Guam uses this instruction as the basis for its management of the PCB inventory. The GAO concluded, however, that the Navy could not have followed the PPE guidelines, because its supply system did not carry the saranex-coated tyvek overalls. The GAO further concluded that, as a result, there were no saranex-coated tyvek coveralls available on Guam when the Piti spill occurred. The GAO noted that contracting procedures were subsequently started and the PWC received the first delivery of coveralls 5 months after the need was first recognized.

 Comments From the Assistant Secretary of

The GAO also reported that the OSHA regulations state that PPE should include chemical-resistant boots with steel toe and shank, which were also not available on Guam and were not worn by the PWC emergency response crew. The GAO found that, instead, the response team wore three layers of plastic bags over work shoes. The GAO concluded that some of the employee shoes may, therefore, have been contaminated during the cleanup effort. (pp. 44-48/GAO Draft Report)

Now on pp. 28, 30.

DOD RESPONSE: Concur.

- o FINDINGS S: Possible Concentrations in the Air: Use of Respirators. The GAO observed that those individuals in the plant at the time of the accident described a fine mist in the air and most of those described breathing problems as a result of being in or near the mist. The GAO observed, however, that the Navy did not monitor for airborne concentrations of dioxins and furans during the incident and early part of the cleaning. The GAO concluded, therefore, that because of this delay, it is not possible to tell if any concentrations were excessive during the early part of the response and cleanup. The GAO reported that the workers at the spill site changed the types of respirators they used several times during the response and cleanup. The GAO found that, on May 26, 1987, the emergency response crews entered the plant, with self-contained breathing apparatus. The GAO further found, however, that on May 27, one day after the accident, the PWC replaced the apparatus with half-face respirators and, for those individuals not using solvents, the requirement for any type of respirator was deleted by June 3. The GAO observed that, at the time of its on-site review, because of the discovery of dioxins and furans, individuals going into the plant were again being required to wear full-face respirators. (pp. 48-49/GAO Draft Report)

Now on p. 30.

DOD RESPONSE: Concur.

- o FINDING T: Civilian Clothing Worn Under PPE. The GAO found that, during the emergency response to and cleanup of the contaminates, the workers wore civilian clothes under the PPE because the recommended undergarments were not available. (The GAO noted that since the tyvek coveralls were transparent, it was necessary to have some type of undergarment.) The GAO reported that, according to the workers involved, it was not uncommon for the contaminated

Appendix IV
 Comments From the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Production and Logistics

oil and solvents to penetrate the tyvek coveralls and soak through the workers' clothes. The GAO noted that the contractor, hired by the Navy to evaluate the PPE used by workers in the plant, concluded that, although employees wore half-mask respirators with organic vapor/pesticide and high-efficiency particulate air filter cartridges, the solvents, PCBs, dioxins, and furans may have soaked through the uncoated tyvek suits clothing and may have contaminated cleanup workers, leading to potential skin absorption of the contaminants. The GAO further reported that, according to PWC officials, although they verbally offered to test any workers' possessions, such as clothing, shoes, automobiles, and homes or their family members, only a few workers responded and those requested their autos be tested. According to the GAO, the test results from the automobiles were negative or showed only very minute traces of PCBs. (pp. 5-6, pp. 49-50, pp. 53-54/GAO Draft Report)

DOD RESPONSE: Concur.

- o FINDING U: PPE Worn By Plant Operators and Support Personnel. The GAO reported that controllers, who are responsible for reading and maintaining the power gauges for proper plant operation, were originally sent into the plant about two hours after the accident wearing PPE similar to that of the response crew, except that half-mask respirators and only two layers of surgical gloves without neoprene outer gloves were used. The GAO found that this same PPE was used until June 3, when they were allowed to enter the control room without respirators. The GAO further found that, on June 8, tyvek coveralls were eliminated from their PPE because they were not in contact with the contamination. The GAO reported that other employees who entered the plant, between the time of the accident and the discovery of dioxins, such as maintenance crews or inspectors, used many combinations of PPE depending on their location and function within the plant. The GAO added, with the discovery that dioxins and furans were present in the PCB oil, the PWC increased all PPE worn within the contaminated areas of the plant. (pp. 51-53/GAO Draft Report)

DoD Response: Concur. The PPE was specified to be commensurate with the hazards that the various groups of personnel were expected to encounter. The PPE was increased as a precaution after the finding of dioxins and furans.

- o FINDING V: Employee Exposures Varied. The GAO found that, of the 66 employees in the PiTi Power Plant when the PCBs were released, 29 came into direct contact with the spill. The GAO reported that, within 3 days, 50 of the 66 were medically examined, which included checking vital signs and respiratory functions, taking blood samples, and establishing a medical monitoring program for each individual. The GAO added that an additional nine employees did not request a medical examination until after July 1, 1987, and one employee did not request one until October 1987. The GAO further found that, on May 27 and 28, at the request of medical officials, all employees who had been in the plant at the time of the accident or thought they may have been close enough to the plant to be exposed to PCBs were asked to report to the hospital for examinations. The GAO reported that, eventually, 27 people reported to the hospital stating that they had been inside the plant at the time of the accident, with six not reporting for examinations until September and one not until October. The GAO noted that, in addition, just to be on the safe side, all Navy employees who thought they may have been exposed to PCBs were asked to report for medical examinations. The GAO observed that, as a result of these Navy efforts, the number of employees who requested examinations reached 251. The GAO concluded that the medical monitoring program is in line with OSHA regulations and Navy guidance. (pp. 55-58, pp. 71-72/GAO Draft Report)

Now on pp. 37-38, 43.

DOD RESPONSE: Concur.

- o FINDING W: Medical Monitoring Regulations and Guidance. The GAO reported that the Navy Energy and Environmental Support Activity's Hazardous Substance Spill Contingency Planning Manual" requires, that all on-scene operations and cleanup team personnel, also work with or near hazardous substances be provided continuous medical monitoring, including a replacement physical exam to establish a personal physical baseline. The GAO further reported that, in addition, the "Guam Site Specific Health and Safety Plan for Pity Power Plant" states that all PWC personnel who operate the power plant or work in the PCB clean-up shall participate in a medical monitoring program, to be initiated when an employee starts work and continued on a regular basis. Moreover, the GAO noted the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health Bulletin 45 states that a medical surveillance program should be established to prevent or detect, at an early stage, adverse health effects in workers resulting from exposure to PCBs. The GAO also observed that medical and work histories should taken for each worker prior to job placement (to establish a baseline) and updated periodically. (pp. 59-60/GAO Draft Report)

DOD RESPONSE: Concur

Comments From the Assistant Secretary of
Defense for Production and Logistics

Now on pp. 4, 38-39, 44-45.

- o FINDING X: Delays in Examining Employees. The GAO found that after dioxin and furans were identified, all 251 employees who had reported for medical examinations were included in the medical monitoring program. According to the GAO, the Navy planned to include only those individuals who had been directly contaminated and those involved in the cleanup and decontamination. The GAO found, however, that 73 employees involved in the cleanup or operation of the plant, were not given baseline examinations or had not received the required periodic examination for over a year. The GAO concluded that the delay resulted from (1) the lack of resources (funds, equipment, and personnel), (2) not following set procedures and (3) not monitoring implementation of the procedures. The GAO further concluded that, because the Navy did not know the medical conditions of these employees at the time of the accident, it may be difficult to determine if there are any long-term effects on the health of these individuals. (pp. 7-8 pp. 60-62, p. 71-72/GAO Draft Report)

DoD Response: Concur. The DoD agrees that 73 people were not initially evaluated for short term health risks and that lack of resources was a factor. However, with the exception of chloracne, the medical profession, to date, has not established any statistically or clinically significant long term health risks from acute (short term) exposure to PCBs.

Now on pp. 39-40.

- o FINDING Y: Effects of PCBs on Humans: Naval Hospital's Long-Term Study. The GAO presents a general outline of the effect on humans of exposure to high levels of PCB, as well as the effect of exposure to dioxins and furans. The GAO recognized, however, that there are differences of opinion on the effects of PCBs on humans, but did specify that PCBs are considered human suspect carcinogens. The GAO reported that, as a result of the PCB spill, the Naval hospital on Guam has begun implementing a long-term medical study of those individuals who are included in the medical monitoring program. According to the GAO, the purpose of the study is to determine the long-term effects of exposure to PCBs on humans. (pp. 62-65/GAO Draft Report)

DoD Response: Concur. While valuable documentation may result from this study, it is anticipated that it will be consistent with other well controlled epidemiologic studies, which have failed to substantiate any long term health hazards to humans from acute (short term) PCB exposure.

- o FINDING Z: Testing for PCBs in the Blood. The GAO reported that, according to Navy officials, there is no set safe level for PCBs in an individual's blood and people with a PCB blood count of as low as 10 parts per billion have experienced problems. The GAO reported that the results of the PCB blood tests on PWC individuals indicate there are two PCB derivatives (Aroclors 1242 and 1260) present in the employees blood streams. The GAO commented that study evidence on Aroclor 1260 shows it is likely to cause cancer. The GAO also noted that, in many cases, aroclor 1242 showed up at much higher concentrations in the employees blood than aroclor 1260, even though the aroclor released from the Piti transformer was 1260. The GAO observed that the Navy does not know if the PCB 1260 is from Piti or whether the employees have picked it up from some other source, nor is it known where the employees got the PCB 1242. (pp. 66-69/GAO Draft Report)

Comments From the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Production and Logistics

DoD Response: Concur. There is no generally recognized safe limit for serum PCB levels. Furthermore, there has been no established relationship between PCB exposure and serum PCB levels. The production of liver cancers has been demonstrated in experimental animals following injection of both AROCLOR 1242 and 1260. However, the relevance to humans of these studies has not been demonstrated.

- o FINDING AA: Medical Problems Experienced. The GAO observed that nine employees included in the medical monitoring program have been notified physical examinations showed their triglycerides levels were greater than normal and possibly are PCB-related. The GAO reviewed the medical complaints of 104 employees, who complained of incident-related medical problems, and found that 43 had experienced one or more of the following:

- breathing or throat irritation;
- nausea or diarrhea;
- eye irritation;
- dizziness or headaches; and/or
- rash or skin irritation.

The GAO concluded that it was impossible to determine those specific medical problems caused by the PCBs and those caused by a combination of the PCBs and the chemicals used for clean up or from some other unknown cause. The GAO pointed out, however, that most of the employees who complained were those directly exposed or in the cleanup crews. The GAO observed that most of the symptoms lasted only a short time; although in two cases, the medical problems lasted for more than a month. (pp. 69-70/GAO Draft Report)

Now on pp. 43-44.

Appendix IV
 Comments From the Assistant Secretary of
 Defense for Production and Logistics

DOD RESPONSE: Concur.

- o FINDING BB: Testing Family Members. According to the GAO, the Navy is not required to test for PCB blood levels in employee family members and does not plan to test any family members, since the Navy contends there is very little chance for the contaminants to have reached the employee homes. The GAO again confirmed that only traces of PCB or none at all were found in those employee personal automobiles tested. (p. 71/GAO Draft Report)

DoD Response: Concur. The medical findings listed from the acute exposure to PCBs are consistent with information previously reported in the clinical literature.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- o RECOMMENDATION 1: The GAO recommended that the Secretary of the Navy determine the feasibility of having pre-negotiated testing, sampling, and detailed characterization contracts available at all installations using PCB equipment. (p. 37/GAO Draft Report)

DoD Response: Concur. A panel of senior safety, health and environmental protection personnel, representing headquarters commands is being tasked to review the Department of the Navy PCB elimination and control program. A meeting was held July 27, 1988, to draft the charter and identify panel members. The panel will be convened in August. The panel members will assess the feasibility of having a pre-negotiated contract ready to respond to any possible future incidents involving PCB. The results of the panel deliberations are expected to be available by November, 1988.

- o RECOMMENDATION 2: The GAO recommended that the Secretary of the Navy ensure that the required training is provided for employees working in a potentially hazardous situation (such as at the Piti Power Plant), so they are aware of the potential dangers and what they should do if a problem arises. (pp. 37-38/GAO Draft Report)

DoD Response: Concur. The Navy helped develop the DoD training program to implement the OSHA Hazard Communication (HAZCOM) Program (29 CFR 1910.1200). This training initiative is to be implemented DoD wide by February, 1989. All agencies are in the process of updating their inventories of materials used in each work area to ensure all potentially hazardous materials are identified and included in the HAZCOM training plan. The senior panel will emphasize the need to ensure that OSHA PCB training requirements (29 CFR 1910.1200) are included in the HAZCOM program.

- o RECOMMENDATION 3: The GAO recommended that the Secretary of the Navy have the Navy Supply Command [Naval Supply Systems Command], in line with OSHA and Navy regulations, stock the required personal protective clothing in a readily accessible location. (p. 54/GAO Draft Report)

DoD Response: Concur. The senior panel will review the PCB unique protective clothing requirements. Special emphasis will be given early in the review to ensure the clothing is readily available to field activities. Guidance will be drafted, as necessary, to try to get all of the items into the standard stock system for easier access by the activities. The result of the panel's review is expected to be available by November 1988.

- o RECOMMENDATION 4: The GAO recommended that the Secretary of the Navy emphasize the requirement [OSHA basis] for employees who work in hazardous conditions to receive baseline medical examinations prior to entry into the workplace and receive the regularly scheduled medical examination. (p. 72/GAO Draft Report)

DoD Response: Concur. The Chief of Naval Operations and Commandant of the Marine Corps were reminded, in a memorandum of July 28, 1988, to emphasize to their field activities the importance of doing baseline physical examinations on personnel who will work in hazardous conditions. The senior panel will develop additional guidance, if needed.

The following are GAO's comments on the Department of Defense letter dated August 5, 1988.

GAO Comments

1. A draft of this report stated that PCBs were released by a pressure release plug designed to relieve pressure on the transformer termination box. DOD commented that information obtained subsequent to our audit indicated that the PCBs were released through a split in the side of the termination box. We have changed this section of the report to reflect DOD's comment.
2. A draft of this report stated that PWC did not make a site characterization of the spill area before the emergency response and cleanup crews entered the plant. DOD commented that the site characterization was made in three phases. Records we reviewed had been prepared interpreting OSHA's regulations incorrectly. We have revised this section of the report to reflect that the site characterization was made.
3. A draft of this report stated that the EPA required that the contaminated area be cleaned up to 10 nanograms per 100 square centimeters in restricted access areas and to 100 nanograms per 100 square centimeters in low-level contact areas. DOD commented that we had incorrectly reported the standards. We have revised that report to show that EPA's standards are 10 micrograms per 100 square centimeters and 100 micrograms per 100 square centimeters.
4. A draft of this report stated that the total cleanup costs for the spill would reach $10 million. DOD commented that the revised cleanup cost estimate was $6 million. We revised the report to recognize the lower estimate.
